Call for presentation proposals for Land Condition Symposium 2020

The land condition symposium is a one-day technical event focusing on knowledge exchange, debate and discussion addressing topical issues at the centre of land condition. Throughout the day speakers will present on cutting edge scientific research, best practice in the assessment and remediation of land, and sectoral updates from a legal perspective.

Drawing on policy, guidance, scientific research and management of contaminated land across the UK and beyond, this symposium attracts environmental scientists, expert practitioners, consultants, local authority officers, academics and NGOs to engage in discussion around effective management of contaminated land.

Objectives

We invite submissions for presentation proposals which meet at least one of the below criteria:

- 1) Promote or announce new scientific research or innovative developments or provide an update on scientific guidance in this specialism
- 2) Showcase best practice in the assessment and remediation of land
- 3) Provide a legal or policy update on a topical issue within the sector
- 4) Introduce an emerging challenge being increasingly faced by professionals within the sector

Please note: All presentations are 20-minutes in duration followed by 10-minutes for questions. Presenters will have a free delegate place to attend the duration of the Symposium. We encourage submissions to be solo presentations and avoid joint presentations where possible. All submissions will be shared with the Symposium working group once entries close and the chosen presenters will be contacted within 1 week of the deadline.
